Executive Leadership Development in Heritage Management Workshops

Communication Strategy and Strategic Marketing for Cultural Organizations

23-25 April 2021

Virtual Training Program

You have organized the best exhibition of the year or set up a ground-breaking educational program. You have worked hard with curators, conservators, educators, everything is ready to rock, but now you wonder... how can I bring people in? How can I reach my audience, and what should I be telling them? Informing and engaging the public is a crucial process for the success and sustainability of heritage institutions. However, heritage-related university programs do not usually include any training in Communications, and heritage managers who cannot afford to revert to external experts might find themselves in serious troubles when it comes to communicate and promote what they are doing.

Today, more than ever, it is critical that strong messages be part of an effective communication strategy for today's leaders. By focusing more on content, when embracing traditional as well as social media, leaders can more effectively manage and enhance the reputation of their organizations.

This 3-day interactive, content-driven, virtual course is a focused learning experience that provides a systemic approach on how to successfully attract the attention of key audiences through traditional, new and social media. At the end of the workshop, participants will have a working guide to effectively communicate news, initiatives and announcements of their organization and manage communication around a crisis or issue.

The workshop's instructor, Derwin Johnson, has 30-plus years of experience as a journalist for CNN, ABC News and PBS, graduate school educator, and senior communication trainer and consultant.

Only scholarship holders are accepted to this workshop. Scholarships cover the majority of the tuition fees, except for participants' contribution. For details, contact us at info@heritagemanagement.org.
